SEEMS TO BE UNBALANCED.

Half starved and so numbed with cold that she was scarcely able to walk, Clara McGilwell, who escaped from the Industrial School of Reform Friday night, dragged herself to the home of Mrs. L. S. Jones in South Louisville at 7 o'clock yesterday morning, and fell fainting in the doorway, after having spent an entire night in a wood-shed in little more than her night clothes.

Finding the young woman in her doorway, Mrs. Jones aided her into the house, where she was revived and the authorities of the School of Reform notified of her presence. Search had already been instituted for the young woman by the authorities, who learned of her escape at roll call yesterday morning.

Clara McGilwell became an inmate of the School of Reform barely two weeks ago. She was found in Louisville without friends and without money, and as she seemed half-witted to the people who discovered her. It was decided to send her to the Industrial School of Reform, where she was placed under the care of the authorities. She claimed to be from Dallas, Texas, and did not know how she reached Louisville. The fact that she is only seventeen years of age, and the charitable institution in whose charge she was placed that the School of Reform was the best place for her.

Evaded Close Watch.

Taken to the school, the young woman proved an obedient inmate, and the authorities had little or no trouble with her. She seemed of a nervous disposition, however, and at times her actions were such that the officers were led to believe that she was slightly deranged. For this reason, she was placed over her than over the majority of the remaining pupils. This guardianship seemed to rankle in the mind of the young woman, and it is probably what caused her attempt at escape.

From the dormitory, in which she had formerly slept with a number of other pupils, had been closed Friday night, the young woman partially clothed herself and made a search for means of escape. Little trouble was experienced in finding this as one of the windows in the building had accidentally been left unbarred, and through this she climbed, reaching the ground by jumping on a shed roof. Once on the ground, she found it difficult in climbing the fence which surrounds the property of the school.

But so unfamiliar with the neighborhood, the young woman wandered around for some time, according to the story she told later to the officials of the school, and finally sought refuge in a shed near the home of Mrs. Jones. There she spent the entire night, huddled under a pile of straw, and tried to protect herself from the wind which whistled through the cracks of the building. The young woman, Clara McGilwell, was so numb she could scarcely move, and for half an hour lay on the ground. Finally she succeeded in dragging herself to the outside, where she was slightly revived by the sun and a short time later she fell in a faint on Mrs. Jones' porch.

Furnishes Her Food.

Mrs. Jones immediately carried the young woman into the house, and placed her in bed, after forcing several cups of hot coffee down her throat and nursing her breakfast. After this the young woman slept for several hours and when she awoke she related her experience to Mrs. Jones.

The committee and Mr. Clark will present to the classes of the Central School, the Normal and Commercial Classes, one recital to be delivered at the High School Building, December 2. Mr. Clark has not yet selected the subject.

TWO WIDOWS,

Two Bridgrooms, Two Kegs of Beer.

THEN TWO MEN IN COURT.

HIGHLAND PARK HAS DOUBLE MARRIAGE

WITH UNUSUAL HAPPENINGS.

Two widows were married in Highland Park Friday night, two bridegrooms bought two kegs of beer and placed them at the disposal of the general public in a large hall at midnight. Two young men were carried home with severe knife wounds in their bodies, while the whole town was aroused and in a state of great excitement over a general fight that occurred in the street.

At 9 o'clock yesterday morning Police Judge Blakeley called his court to order, and there before him were most of those who had revealed in the nuptial bed. A. H. Lowrey, a young man of twenty years, was presented on the charge of malicious cutting. It was charged that he stabbed Walter Snowden in the abdomen with a knife, and displayed to the Judge a wound in his right shoulder, where he himself had been stabbed, and the evidence showed that he had been knocked down and trampled upon, the charge was amended to disorderly conduct and he was merely fined $1 and costs.

Walter Snowden, who was the most serious sufferer from the midnight fight, was brought in by a friend, and the wound in his abdomen is serious, but it is expected that he will recover. As soon as he is able to be out, it is said, he may also be called to account for some of the fighting.

Nuptial Spirit Everywhere.

The wedding was not at the same house, but the spirit of nuptial joy had spread over the whole town. Mrs. Ella McNeill, who was Miss McGuire, was married to John Tugzie, Mrs. Lizzie Schell, who was Mrs. Ernest, was married to William Cooper. The two bridegrooms, having mutual cause for grief, decided to purchase two kegs of beer, each bearing half the expense, and the beer was accordingly placed on draught at the saloon of William Kuhn. Scientificists were the young men of the town in accepting the hospitality of the two bridegrooms, who had chosen the most charming widows from their midst, and the kegs were drained to the dregs by the time the clock struck 12, and the revelers went out into the street to give vent to their feelings in the open air.

Doesn't Know Who Out Him.

A quarrel arose over some small discussion, and in a few minutes there was a general fight in progress. Knives were soon in evidence, and it appeared that blood would be shed on all sides. Lowrey is said to have violently attacked Snowden, but soon after he had dealt the blow that caused the wound in his abdomen, Lowrey was knocked to the ground. He received a deep gash in the shoulder, but is unable to tell who cut him.

Lowrey was arrested by G. C. Hendricks, the Town Marshal, who was aroused from his bed at 1 o'clock. The prisoner was placed in jail last night. Before leaving Highland Park yesterday afternoon, however, he carried off warrants for several men, who, he alleges, took as active a part in the fight as he did.

SNEAK THIEVES HAVE A SUCCESSFUL EVENING.

Sneak thieves operated with some success on Third avenue, between Chestnut street and Broadway, last night, as a result four overcoats and a hat have been reported missing from the neighborhood. The first trace of the thieves was found at the home of Dr. R. B. Gilbert, at 712 Third avenue. Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert were on the second floor of the building when they heard a noise below stairs. A draught of cold air also attracted their attention and they went down to investigate. They found that two overcoats had been taken from his hall. The thief had entered his office and from there had gone into the hall. When he departed he left the front door wide open. The overcoats were valued at $10 and $25. The home of Dr. S. Singleton, three doors from Dr. Gilbert, was entered about the same time in the evening and two overcoats and a hat were taken. A search was made, but none of the owners of the stolen property saw any of the thieves. The thieves were credited in finding no clue to their identity.

Trip To Shelbyville.

The following members of the Y. M. C. A. orchestra left Friday morning to attend the Boys' State Conference at Shelbyville. Prof. Martha Oliver, director; Joe Neal, Frank and Herman Warner, Cecil Straw, Lawrence Meyer, Byron MacDonald, Edwin Solder, Robert and Edwin Lorenz, Fred Gerhart, Emory and Charles All. The boys were entertained Friday night with a banquet by the women of Shelbyville. The orchestra will also attend the State convention, which meets at Owensboro February 21.

Arrested In Baltimore.

Albert Lucas, wanted in this city for grand larceny, was arrested yesterday in Baltimore. He was taken to the city jail to be held until he can be brought here. It is alleged that Lucas robbed George Beck, a saloonkeeper at Thirtieth and Main streets, of $100, a revolver, a gold watch and a number of other articles. He was employed by Mr. Beck as a bartender and grocery clerk. Detectives Maher and Sexton have been working on the case, and discovered that Lucas was in Baltimore.

P. J. Grimes Dead.

P. J. Grimes, who conducted a saloon at Fifteenth and Rowan streets for the last sixteen years, died at 8 o'clock last night at his home, 1812 Portland avenue, after an illness of several weeks. He was prominent in that section of the city and was at various times interested in politics, having been a lifelong Democrat. He was forty-five years of age, and is survived by his wife, two sons and six daughters. The funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Switchman Suffers Injury.

Edward Austin, a switchman for the Illinois Central railroad, fell from a box car at Twelfth and Rowan streets last night and seriously injured his back. He was taken to his home, 1517 Prentiss street, where he was attended by a physician. He is forty-five years of age.

WILD ROSE OF SAGEBRUSH MASQUERADING AS A MAN

Waif of the Range Lived in the Saddle For Six Years—Sex Revealed in Hospital.

A wild rose of rare beauty among the sage brush of the boundless plains, a tiny and the woods of Wyoming as the emblem of purity; with the face of a Madonna and the eyes of a fawn, graceful as a gazelle, shy as an antelope, and with the form of a Venus—only the glorious West could have produced Mary Collins—a patient of St. Joseph's Hospital, says the Denver Post.

Strange enigma she, that even the sweet sisters in charge of the hospital were unable to solve. Perhaps they did not try too hard when she hid behind her flaming blushes and whispered faintly, "Well, I'd rather not tell my real name. 'Spec' it wouldn't do folks no good to know, anyway, and then as they always looked on me as a boy."

That brought out the most interesting phase of all about Mary Collins—so-called—most people took her to be a boy. Took her to be a boy until the tender nurses at the hospital prepared her for the operating table, and then, well, then, she told her story.

Stranger than fiction it was, too. Father was poor and needed help. There was no boy about the place, so little Mary—that much of the name is real—came to the rescue. She donned a cowboy's outfit, threw a horned saddle on a broncho—she could pull a cinch equal to any cowboy—and rode the range with father, who was a horse man. What fun was to her then!

Left An Orphan.

But darker days came. Father and mother died, and then Mary—Mary Collins—rode the ranges through long and dreary seasons to keep the wolf from the door.

The telephone message to St. Joseph's was simple, but exciting: "Man dying at the Union Station; send ambulance at once."

The "man" whose grave included the range and the range, was a little, thin, headed boy and a sombrero. He gave him in a serious confession. He found his name "James Brown." He was a private ward, away from the fresh, free air. "James Brown" broke down and told a pitiful tale of Wyoming life and the face of dishevelment.

"She was a pretty little thing," said one of the sisters in charge, "and the way she tried to explain things while lying there suffering so, was pitiful to see. Oh, I could not help it. I could not help her mean even in her sleep and we were almost prepared to hear the tale of some terrible crime when late that evening she called me to her bed and said she had some-thing to tell me."

Sale of Luke Blackburn For $25 Recalls Compliment To Mrs. Cleveland.

The sale of Luke Blackburn, the famous thoroughbred stallion, at Belle Meade reminds the Macon News of an incident that happened at Belle Meade when Mrs. Grover Cleveland was the admired and beloved mistress of the White House. A beautiful and most delicate compliment was paid Mrs. Cleveland by an aged and favored negro attendant of Gen. Jackson, the owner of the celebrated estate in Tennessee.

The negro was nearly eighty years old. He had been with the Jackson family since his birth, and felt his "keep." He was a splendid specimen of physical manhood, over six feet tall, and weighed perhaps 230 pounds. His head was massive, and covered with flowing white locks. He was an impressive looking person, and sat his horse erect as an Indian. How well we remember his very striking appearance.

President and Mrs. Cleveland, and a company of distinguished Tennesseans and Georgians, were at Belle Meade one day, the delighted guests of Gen. Jackson, who was the personification of Southern chivalry and hospitality. Gen. Jackson escorted his guests over the famous farm, and with especial pride had his numerous famous horses exhibited to the party.

Presently Luke Blackburn, the magnificent thoroughbred, for which Gen. Jackson paid $25,000 at a dispersal sale, was released from his barn. He stepped forth with the air of a conqueror. He lifted his feet as if prancing to the inspiring music of the band. He raised his head with the majesty of a king, his regular front with its coating of fine hair, glistened in the sunlight.

"What a noble and beautiful animal! See how proudly he walks!"

Instantly the negro attendant took off his hat, and bowing and kneeling before him with all the grace and air of a Chesterfield, said to her—"Madam, he knows who is looking at him."

The compliment to Mrs. Cleveland was a delicate one. She smiled, blushed, and thanked the polite negro, and all the members of the party joined in acknowledging his courtesy.

But how the mighty have fallen! Luke Blackburn, sire of Proctor Knott, the first winner of the Futurity race, and the sire of other famous horses, was sold at auction Tuesday at Belle Meade for the small sum of $25.

By an almost unanimous vote he was declared no longer a pastor, nor even a member. It was also decided to charge the Sunday preaching service to song and prayer services until another preacher could be obtained.

The Rev. E. D. Drumgoole, pastor of Mount Pisgah church, and three of his deacons, held a meeting on Sunday, the Rev. Mr. Drumgoole acting as moderator. It is also said that Mr. Bolen voted for a change in the service, but that after the meeting he said he would preach on Sunday as usual.

Mr. Bolen attempted to read the first lesson from the Scriptures, but he couldn't be heard above the songs of praise from the congregation, who paid no attention to the minister. Mr. Bolen stayed in the pulpit for nearly an hour, the congregation singing all the while.

Sunday night the two constables whom Mr. Bolen had at the morning session were not present and the contest was a bit more noisy. One of the brethren was on his knees praying when the pastor entered. As Mr. Bolen went to the pulpit a steward began reading from the thirty-seventh Psalm when he was suddenly cut short by Mr. Bolen, who began reading in a loud voice from John the evangelist.

The boy is about sixteen years of age, and it is charged that Miss Smith literally cut off his flesh to pieces with a whip because he refused to divulge the name of a comrade who had carried a pistol to a picnic given by the teacher. Miss Smith claimed that she acted under instructions given by Principal Terry. It is said that Terry himself also whipped the boy after Miss Smith had done so, despite the alleged fact that the lad had been so badly whipped by her that he was barely able to walk.

Miss Smith was dismissed by the Trustees the day after the alleged whipping occurred. Prof. Terry is still principal. When the alleged whipping occurred Mr. Richardson, the father of the youth, was stopping the district in his own behalf, and he said the occasion moved the School Trustees to postpone action against Terry.

At a special meeting of the church last Thursday evening, Mr. Bolen was charged with calling the members of his congregation hypocrites and agents of the devil and saying they were on their way to hell, and also of having members arrested and tried in court without first having them brought before the church.

Mr. Bolen admitted that these charges were true, but refused to beg the pardon of the church, as requested.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS HOLD SECRET MEETING.

President Hawkins, of Burley Tobacco Growers' Company, Will Talk Later.

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—A meeting of the Board of Directors of the Burley Tobacco Growers' Company was held behind closed doors at the Leland Hotel to-night, but President W. B. Hawkins refused to discuss the meeting or to intimate what success the company was meeting with in its efforts to secure control of the burley tobacco raised in this year. He said that matters of much importance were discussed by the board and that the success of the venture would be given out in a statement. Immediately after the meeting adjourned, President Hawkins and several of the directors left the city, but their destination or object could not be learned.

COMMISSION MAY SUE TO FORFEIT CHARTERS.

Austin, Texas, Nov. 26.—The Railroad Commission today passed an order calling a hearing for December 23 to ascertain why the commission shall not institute suit to forfeit the charters of the Houston and Texas Central, the Texas and New Orleans and the Texas and Pacific, on the charge that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company owns stock in all of these roads in violation of State laws.

On account of the continued warm weather an Eastern manufacturer found himself overwhelmingly overstocked. Knowing our unlimited outlet he advised us of what he had on hand and named a price. We readily consented at the remarkably low price that was made us. The goods have arrived, and to-morrow starts the BIGGEST FUR SALE in our history. Wintersmith's Remedies FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS

COATS, WRAPS AND SUITS 25% LESS THAN REGULAR

SEVERAL prominent New York manufacturers were stocked with canceled orders. Merchants in various parts of the country anticipated an overwhelming business this fall and placed re-orders in the early part of the season. The mild climate and backward season compelled the merchants to cancel their orders, much to their surprise and regret as well. These business reverses left the makers in a distressful condition. They immediately began to plan, in a businesslike way, to rid themselves of the wearables made to order. Sacrifice was their resort, which they did in a forcible way.

The Citizens' Life Insurance Company of Louisville began business last Wednesday and wrote $10,000 in applications the first day, which is a record for the company. Mr. W. H. Gregory, the general manager, is an untiring worker and a practical insurance man in every sense of the word. During the first year the company will operate in Kentucky and West Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas and Texas. Manager Gregory states that his company will write all standard forms of policies and will also insure women on a parity with men, and intends establishing a department managed by a woman and with women agents.

HARVEY JOINER BEGINS HIS EIGHTH EXHIBIT.

Has Seventy-three of Best Bits of Work He Has Put On Display in Years.

Harvey Joiner has issued the catalogue for his eighth annual exhibit and sale of paintings in his studio in the Courier-Journal building from December 6 to 20. The hours will be from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. He has on exhibition seventy-three of his paintings, all of them landscapes, in which he excels, and many of them birdwood scenes for which he has achieved an enviable reputation. One of his handiest pictures is the "Brook in the Woods—Autumn," a half-toned of which embellishes the cover of the catalogue and gives some small idea of the excellence of his production. Another of his particularly fine bits of work is a scene, "On the Hillside," which is the "Old Road Near Jeffersontown."

DINNERS FOR BENEFIT OF PRESBYTERIAN ORPHANAGE.

Beginning Tuesday and continuing for four days the women connected with the several Southern Presbyterian churches will serve dinners to the public in the storeroom on Fifth street, near Main, opposite the Kenyon Building. A most acceptable menu has been arranged for each day with a change for each dinner. The women of the Westminster, Stuart Robinson, Parkland, Crescent Hill, Presbyterian, Portland and Highland churches will each superintend and furnish one table. The Second Presbyterian church will have three tables and the First church two tables.

MORPHINE

Cause of R. C. Nuckols' Insanity.

COMMITTED TO THE ASYLUM.

INDICTMENTS AGAINST HIM STILL EFFECTIVE.

HALLUCINATION OF WEALTH.

R. C. Nuckols, under three indictments, one for forgery and two for obtaining money by false pretenses, was adjudged insane in the Criminal Court yesterday and committed to Central Asylum for treatment. This finding of the jury does not relieve the defendant of the charges against him, but merely applies to his present condition. In the event of cure the Commonwealth may prosecute the cases against him, though this is not altogether certain. The question is left open as to whether or not Nuckols was insane at the time he is alleged to have committed the crimes with which he is charged. Nuckols is accused of having forged the name of J. M. Albertson to two notes for an aggregate of about $5,000 and secured the money on them from the Union National Bank. It is also claimed that he gave a worthless check for $25 to the Kaufman-St. Louis company and another for $15 to J. Bacon & Sons. The morphine habit was alleged to be the cause of Nuckols' mental derangement, and a number of witnesses, including a medical expert, were introduced to give credence to this theory and to tell of numerous peculiar actions of the defendant.

Illusions of Wealth.

It was shown that the defendant possesses illusions as to great wealth belonging to him, when as a matter of fact he has nothing. When on the stand himself Nuckols seemed able to recollect only a few instances of his past career and these very vaguely. He was not certain as to any wealth he may have thought he possessed. George Nuckols, defendant's brother; W. B. Halldeman and Ike Starks all related curious actions which they had observed in the accused. Dr. Sheeley testified that in his knowledge Nuckols had for some time been a victim of the morphine habit and that the excessive use of this drug tended to make one entirely irresponsible as to money matters. R. C. Tovey, Deputy Circuit Court Commissioner, swore that he had known Nuckols for years and that he regarded him as an insane man on account of his recent actions.

Ed Duane, Deputy Turnkey at the jail, testified that he had observed Nuckols on more than one occasion attempt to steal a razor from one of the guards' pockets with the intention of cutting his throat.

"Later," said the witness, "he borrowed a knife from Jim Howard, saying that he wanted to trim his curls. When he got the knife he tried to cut his throat with it. He gave me two or three checks on banks at present time, said, but they were not good. Once he sent a check for $50,000 down stairs to the colored boy with word to bring him a pie and a plate of tobacco and keep the change."

James P. Edwards, the defendant's attorney, testified, saying, "I engaged Nuckols when he was tried in the Police Court on the charge of carrying a concealed and deadly weapon. He came to court with a new pistol in his pocket, fully loaded, his other weapon having been taken away from him by the police. He told me that if he got a jail sentence he was going to blow his brains out. He feared that in jail he would get no morphine and that this would kill him. Later he came to my office with a woman with whom I understood he had been living. He told me he wanted to give her his land in Texas and $35,000 in bonds. Upon investigation I found he did not possess any property. Shortly afterwards he bought a house in the Highlands for $8,000, and was having the papering done when the seller found out he had been hoodwinked. I am now in defending him in the Police Court, he gave me a check for $20,000."

Fee Very Commonplace.

"There is nothing unusual about that for members of our profession, is there," said Mr. Goldsmith dryly on cross-examination. Dr. Curran Pope swore that he had examined Nuckols at the jail and found that he appeared like a man under the influence of an opiate. "He had that airy, aimless manner of wandering around common-law cases," said the witness. "I am convinced that the morphine habit has been largely responsible for breaking down his mind. He is entirely off on the subject of wealth. He offered me a check for $1,000."

TO HEAR DETAILS OF MR. CARNEGIE'S GIFT.

The conditions under which the Louisville Free Public Library is to receive a free gift from Andrew Carnegie will be reported to the trustees at a meeting to be held Wednesday afternoon, at 3 o'clock. John R. Bates and A. H. Hopkins, the librarian, and recently received from Mr. Carnegie the promise of an additional gift. The gift will be made to the trustees of the result of the interview with the trustees. They will tell the trustees just how much is to be given by Mr. Carnegie and on what terms.

LOST HIS FORTUNE FIGHTING THE CASE.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 25.—Letaon Balliett, who pleaded guilty to charges preferred by the Government of using the mails with intent to promote a gigantic mine swindle, was today sentenced to three months in jail. The case was one of $300,000. During a former trial of the case it developed that Balliett wrongfully received nearly a quarter of million dollars in sale of worthless mining stocks. He was tried and convicted, appealed and was granted a new trial. Upon promise of leniency he pleaded guilty the second time and asked this mercy of the court. Balliett is said to have spent most of his fortune fighting the case.

SKELETON

In Clothes, Pistol By Its Side.

TELL STORY OF A TRAGEDY.

FOUND ON RIVER BANK NEAR LOUISVILLE.

FACTS WILL NEVER BE KNOWN.

A pistol with one empty cartridge, an old black slouch hat, a pair of shoes bearing the marks of long and hard wear, a plain black suit of clothes including a broken, dry skeleton, all telling the story of a death—perhaps a suicide—were found on the bank of the Ohio river on the farm of Peter Bitzer, five miles from the city, yesterday morning.

The revolver was covered with rust, the flesh of the body was wasted from the bones until they were white, the clothes were rotted and there was not the slightest clew to the identity of the unfortunate who met his end perhaps six months ago.

In Clump of Weeds.

The skeleton was in a clump of weeds, under the trunk of a leaning tree. The coat was at one side and near by was the pistol. The skull was intact, and if the bullet, which is missing from the PUMPKIN—Large, round, hand-packed, 4 cans 25c, dozen, 70c—had not passed through the body, the ribs about the breast would so badly crushed that it was impossible to make any decision as to the course of the bullet. In the pockets were found a blue cotton handkerchief, a lead pencil and a box of cartridges. The coat bore no brand that would tell where it was made. There was no pocketbook, notebook, no letter—nothing to give the slightest hope of identification. The discovery was made by Clyde Bitzer, son of Peter Bitzer. He was cleaning up the brush, preparing to have wood hauled to the house, which is about 1,000 yards from the spot. He did not notice it until he was right upon it and had brushed the bushes back.

Stench Three Months Ago.

"We noticed a stench near there last August," said Mr. Bitzer, "but hogs had been dead frequently at that time and we paid little attention to it. The smell finally died out and we never thought of it again until I came upon the skeleton this morning."

The discovery was reported to Dr. Harris Kelly, the coroner, who ordered Roden Bros. to take charge of the skeleton. It was brought to Louisville yesterday afternoon and taken to the Roden Bros. establishment. Roden Bros. on Second street, where a thorough search of the fragments of clothing failed to reveal any information, what the end of the been the emotions of the little group of men stood about the white bones and looked at the skull, whose secret they realized they were unable to fathom. What misfortune and what infinite despondency, what dark future and what darker past, may have prompted the man to put an end to his trouble, will in all probability never be known. The long breath of circumstances or the swift turning of adverse events that may have led the man to choose a summer night and a beautiful spot on the bank of the river to send a bullet through his heart, will no doubt never be revealed.

Suicide Not Certain.

Nor can it be established that it was suicide. There is no evidence to prove that the unfortunate being did not die fighting for his life; that he did not choose the position near the tree on account of the protection it gave; that he did not fire the shot into the body of the man—or may be woman—who in turn sent him into eternity. There is nothing to support or oppose the theory that the man was not the victim of an enemy, who had lured him to a lonely retreat and wreaked vengeance, long cherished.

The accident theory is also possible. It may have been that after he had chosen the spot for a night's rest he made a careful examination of the weapon, which was his protection, and by accident fired the shot that brought about his secret death. Whatever was the manner of the death, whether it was suicide, murder or accident, and whatever may have been the mental strain that caused it, whoever may have been the victim, it is almost positive the mystery will never be solved and the bones will be disposed of by the coroner.

Died in Missouri.

A MOTHER'S DEVOTED EFFORTS AND THE WONDERFUL RESULT

Mrs. Marion Foster Washburn Cured Her Little Son When Physicians Had Given Up Case In Despair.

Elkhart, Ind., Nov. 25.—[Special.]—A mother's devotion, supplemented by earnest prayer, has accomplished in this city what all the learning of some of the most noted specialists of the country had failed to do, and a child, given up as incurable and apparently doomed to sink into imbecility, is now well and strong, mentally and physically. The case is that of a boy named John, who was born in Elkhart, Ind., and was brought to this city by his mother, Mrs. Marion Foster Washburn, the wife of a prominent Elkhart physician, a member of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, and once the corresponding secretary and afterwards president of that organization. The child, whom she has restored to mental and physical strength is her six-year-old son.

Mrs. Washburn is not a Christian Scientist, though she is a firm believer in the efficacy of prayer. But in the case of her son she prayed not for his cure so much as for a way by which he could be treated successfully. When Chicago specialists, who examined the child, said that he was past medical aid and would develop into imbecility, she did not lose heart. She said she believed that there was a way and gently uttering her commands. There was least restlessness when she was talking to him and after awhile his breathing became less labored and he slept peacefully. Night after night she sat by his bed and talked to him while he slept. "Now you feel better," she would say. "Now my little boy is feeling easy." "Now, no, don't breathe that way, breathe this way," and she would suit her actions to her words and the child would go off into tranquil slumber.

For the first two weeks there was some, but not marked improvement. The child slept better and was apparently gaining strength, but it seemed slow indeed to the anxious mother. Then came a period of great effort, and his physical condition began to improve. He could walk farther without falling, his utterances became more distinct and the mother was greatly encouraged. But she did not relax his vigil. Every night found her at his bedside and the least movement which indicated suffering was met with some encouraging expression and normal slumber at once resulted from the effort. The child is now well in every respect and appears as strong mentally as he did before his fall down the to reach his trouble and she prayed to be directed to this way. Her husband's library, one of the most complete in Elkhart, was resorted to every day, but all works on the subject ended with the same conclusion, and that was in accord with the verdict of the specialists who had been so freely consulted. The child had fallen down stairs several years ago and had received an injury to the skull at the base of the brain. An operation, she was told, would be certain death, and life promised nothing but suffering and gradual degeneracy of mind and body.

As a result of the fall the child became paralyzed on the left side and could walk only a few steps without falling. Though the child slept while she treated him he is assumed to have been separated in a degree from his affliction by the words of his mother, and longer as he came more and more under her influence, nature was thus aided in bringing about that result for which she was so earnestly striving. The moment of his injury, his restoration by brain absorption of the clot which crossed upon the nerve centers and produced the paralysis.

But Mrs. Washburn has no theory to advance. "My boy is restored to health," she says, "and I am oh, so thankful and so happy."

Theories of the Cure. Several theories have been advanced to account for the wonderful cure of the lad, but the most plausible seems to be that the mother has imparted some of the strength of her own and thus assisted nature to reach that normal condition which has been attained. Though the child slept while she treated him he is assumed to have been separated in a degree from his affliction by the words of his mother, and longer as he came more and more under her influence, nature was thus aided in bringing about that result for which she was so earnestly striving. The moment of his injury, his restoration by brain absorption of the clot which crossed upon the nerve centers and produced the paralysis.

How the Child Was Cured. It was at this point that Mrs. Washburn determined to try suggestion as a means of cure. She spent one entire day explaining to the little fellow what she proposed to do and was much gratified to find that he at least comprehended enough to be of some assistance to her. That night she sat by his bed and tried to regulate his breathing by putting her mouth close to his ear

DENIES

Claims of Clarence Parsons To Office.

JUDGE FIELD GIVES OPINION.

JOHN GASPER'S HIP BROKEN BY OVERTURNED WAGON.

SEVEN DIVORCES GRANTED.

Claims to the office of City Engineer set up by Clarence W. Parsons, who formerly held the position, against Joshua F. Breed, the incumbent, were denied yesterday by Judge Field at joint session. The suit was brought last June by Mr. Parsons in the hope of being declared the rightful possessor of the office so that he might enforce collection of back salary from the city of about $12,000, or at the rate of $5,000 a year. On December 10, 1901, Mr. Parsons resigned the office by the Board of Public Works on the eve of its retirement. The term, according to the election, was to be for four years. The present board, as appointed by Mayor Grainger, dismissed Mr. Parsons upon going into office and selected Joshua F. Breed, incumbent, to succeed him. The suit was brought by Mr. Parsons upon the claim that he should hold the office for the term of four years. However, Judge Field, in sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition, holds that the statute carefully withholds the power of one board to displace a board by its appointments. "Each of said boards," the statute reads (meaning both executive boards of the city) may appoint and at pleasure remove the chief of each department under its control.

"The reason and policy for this statute," Judge Field observed, "are obvious. Therefore the removal of the plaintiff without notice or complaint was within the legal rights of the Board of Public Works. Mr. Parsons attempted at the time of his resignation to prevent by injunction the new board's action but failed."

Seven Decrees of Divorce. The following seven divorces were granted yesterday at joint session: Frances Kennedy from Alexander Kennedy; five years' separation alleged. Birdie Gay from George Gay; abandonment alleged. They were married December 29, 1890, in Jeffersonville. George McGuire from Ida McGuire; abandonment charged. They were married February 17, 1901.

W. J. Davidson from Emma Davidson; abandonment charged. They were married September 20, 1896. Anna Wolf from Edward Wolf; cruelty alleged. They were married June 4, 1902, and plaintiff claims she was driven from home by defendant July 17 following. Louise Hartzmann from John Hartzmann; on the charge of cruelty. They were married September 8, 1890. Lizzie Meyer from Philip D. Meyer; drunkenness and wasting of estate charged. They were married September 6, 1896.

Wagon Upset Upon Him. John Gasper brought suit for $20,000 damages on account of a broken hip jointly against the Rome Telephone Company, A. J. Dresser and the city. On September 22, the plaintiff was in an alley between York and Breckinridge streets and second street and Third avenue, a wagon of the defendant Dresser was turned over upon him, causing the injury complained of. The wagon, alleged to have been driven in a rapid and careless manner, ran upon a telephone pole wire, causing

Cotton Oil the Only Laggard in the Local Business World

General activity in nearly all lines of business is shown by the following weekly report of the local branch of R. G. Dun & Co.:

Cotton Oil—This is the season of the year during which the oil refiners should be making considerable money, as well as a great deal of refined oil. It is difficult to do this, however, as it is generally admitted that conditions are not thoroughly satisfactory. The trouble may be only temporary, but the line is rather dull at the present time.

Leather—Business is fairly active and sales are well up with November, 1903. Prospects for large business later on are good. Hats, Caps and Gloves—Prospects are encouraging. Jobbers have hooked a great many more future orders so far than up to the corresponding time last year. Paints, Oils and Glass—During the past month, however, a decided slackening up has been in evidence. This is mainly due to the exceedingly dry weather and the general standstill in the seed business at this time of the year.

Fertilizers—Salesmen are now making contracts for spring delivery. Prospects for trade in this line are good. The general outlook for the line was never better. Collections are being met in a fairly prompt manner.

Towers, Tubs and Tanks—Business has been good during October and November as it was in September. Agricultural Implements—Business is excellent. Orders are coming in very active demand; in fact, there is no trouble at all to sell them.

Tobacco—Business is fairly active and collections are being made with average promptness. Mail—Trade is brisk and has brightened considerably during the past week or two. Orders are coming in better than they have heretofore. Brewers and distillers are proceeding with more confidence since the election is a matter of the past.

Clothing—Orders for spring goods as a whole are ahead of last year; the condition, however, is somewhat spotted and owing to the mild weather conditions and new orders are retarding. Seeds—Business, from June 1 to November 1, was 50 per cent. ahead of last year. Orders are coming in better than they have heretofore. This is mainly due to the exceedingly dry weather and the general standstill in the seed business at this time of the year.

BECOMING A MOTHER

Is an ordeal which all women approach with indescribable fear, for nothing compares with the pain and horror of child-birth. The thought of the suffering and danger in store for her, robs the expectant mother of all pleasant anticipations of the coming event, and casts over her a shadow of gloom which cannot be shaken off. Thousands of women have found that the use of Mother's Friend during pregnancy robs confinement of all pain and danger, and insures safety to life of mother and child. This scientific liniment is a god-send to all women at the time of their most critical trial. Not only does Mother's Friend carry women safely through the perils of child-birth, but its use gently prepares the system for the coming event, prevents "morning sickness," and other discomforts of this period. BRILLIANT SOCIAL EVENT.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 26.—West Point defeated the Annapolis eleven by the score of 10 to 0—two touchdowns and one goal.

The game does not properly indicate the relative strength of the two eleven, for probably not in the history of the great university game have two teams been more evenly matched.

The first touchdown for the army was the result of a fumble by one of the navy backs, but the brilliancy with which Tipton, the army's center, took advantage of the error has never been excelled. If, coupled, on a football gridiron.

The game had been in progress less than ten minutes; the navy had shown unexpected strength in defense, while the army's much vaunted offense had crumbled to naught. With the ball in midfield, Smith, for the navy, was hurried back for a loss. Spencer also failed and Howard kicked to the army's thirty-five yard line.

West Point found the navy line a tough nut to crack. The navy's line, under the leadership of Tipton, was a formidable one. There were three Annapolis men under the punt, but when all had been thrown the ball rolled off to one side of the mass of players. Tipton, coming from the right, with muscle and brain both in good working condition, kicked the ball toward navy's goal. Pursued by half a dozen navy men, he had no time to stop and secure the sphere, but rushing on he again dribbled it. His aim was accurate and the ball was driven nearer the navy's goal.

Within fifteen yards of the covered end of the field, Tipton, with a powerful kick, sent the ball into the navy's goal. The navy's defense was so good that the ball was driven back to the navy's goal line. Tipton, with a powerful kick, sent the ball into the navy's goal.

West Point Gets Advantage.

This touchdown gave West Point the advantage of the wind and was doubtless mainly responsible for the victory of the army over the navy. The navy missed the goal and the score stood 5 to 0 in favor of the army.

Probably never in the memory of the oldest football enthusiast has a more bitter defense been witnessed than that put up by the navy during the next twenty minutes of play. On an exchange of punts the army secured the ball on the navy's thirty-five yard line. Tipton, with a powerful kick, sent the ball into the navy's goal.

Immense Crowd Present.

Socially recognized the West Point-Annapolis game as the premier football contest. Not in the history of the University of Pennsylvania has such an immense crowd witnessed a football contest in this city. The game was attended by a vast throng of spectators, many of whom were from out of town.

SEES DANGER IN FOOTBALL GAME.

Dr. Draper Says Faults Exist As the Sport is Now Conducted.

AN address calculated to stimulate discussion in all centers where the game of football is played, was given by Dr. Andrew S. Draper, former president of the University of Illinois and now superintendent of public instruction of the State of New York, to-day said that grave danger to the morals of students playing the game existed, and suggested reforms which might prove effective remedies, says a special from Boston.

The speaker's topic was physical training and athletics in the schools, and was delivered before the sixtieth annual meeting of the Massachusetts Teachers' Association.

Evils of the Game.

Dr. Draper agreed with the critics who hold that football is a game which encourages professionalism, encourages real battle rather than open manliness, and that it is too expensive a sport and gathers more money than ought to be allowed to be controlled by students. That the game also breeds loafing, gaming, and drinking, and does not make for effective character building, also was maintained by the speaker.

Dr. Draper said it is too good a game to suffer from these evils. He said that the great universities would indeed serve the public interest by purging the game of its faults. Let the legislators and authorities make football a game of pure sportsmanship and less hazardous and more attractive to the public.

A university director that none shall represent it by a marauding student in the game a year with very rarely settle matters.

Gate Receipts Too Large.

"The charge for seeing the games should not be too large to prevent all those who have the interests of the institution at heart from seeing them."

"If, beyond this, it might become distasteful to understand that there is nothing in common between a university and a stadium, and that it is a crime in the university as it is in the State for a boy to gamble on university contests, about all the grounds for criticism which I have to offer would be removed."

HART GOES TO SAN FRANCISCO

Louisville Boxer Expects To Fight Kid McCoy and Jim Jeffries Before He Returns.

MARVIN HART, Louisville's crack pugilist, has again entered the fighting game, and will leave to-day for San Francisco in order to take part in several fights on the coast this winter.

He will make his first trip to the Golden Gate, but he expects to make good and to ultimately fight James J. Jeffries for the championship of the world before the flowers bloom again in this part of the country.

Hart will leave to-day for Chicago, where he will be joined by Jack McCormick, his former manager, and Billy Pierce, who until a short time ago looked after the interests of George Gardner, the Lowell, Mass., boxer whom Hart defeated twice in the East after having lost a decision at the local Auditorium on account of a broken hand.

Pierce is the sporting editor of a Boston sport sheet which is devoted exclusively to pugilism, and is a man of considerable knowledge and experience. He has been a part of the New York publication of the same class. He witnessed all of Hart's fights against Gardner, and being a shrewd fellow, soon concluded that the Louisville man was a bear-catcher, and was the superior of his Massachusetts champion in every department of the fighting game. As soon as he arrived at this conclusion he began to lay his wires to manage Hart and drop Gardner like a hot potato.

In the meantime, Johnny Seitz, the East End sport, and other Louisville men were eager to look after Hart's financial interests, but, being inexperienced, Hart was easily influenced by the Easterners. He cast his fighting future with Pierce in spite of the fact that Jack McCormick had treated him fairly in all of his business dealings, and according to the best information obtainable last night, McCormick will hereafter only be Hart's trainer, while Pierce will do the brain work.

While Pierce may be a shrewd promoter, he is not a very honest man. It is certain that he will keep Hart busy and that Marvin will return to Louisville next summer with more money than he ever had before. Hart has fought the best men of the world at his weight and he has nothing to show for the performance except a small farm which cost him but a few hundred dollars. He has been badly managed through in spite of the fact that he is one of the greatest fighters that this country has ever produced. It is to be hoped by all sportsmen that he will be able to get out from under the thumb of the Easterners and will return to Louisville in the spring with a large amount of money, which he will undoubtedly be entitled to.

According to the plan announced last night Hart will try to get on a match with Kid McCoy to take place in San Francisco in January, and if he defeats McCoy, he will be able to go again to the States in the summer. He will be a grizzly champion of the sunny slope of the Pacific who has sunk into oblivion all his most likely opponents with the pick of the best of his mighty frame.

BRIGHT OUTLOOK IN THE EAST

Beldame, Stalwart, Ort Wells, Delhi and Other Great Horses Expected To Do Well Next Season.

REGARDING the turf outlook in the East next season the following to-day Telegraph has the following to say:

In this State the outlook for great contests in 1935 is brighter even than it was a year ago. Great horses as Irish Lad and Hermit are, and deservedly popular, we have others of caliber equal to them even should they, unfortunately, not see the post. It is, however, the best judgment of the turf that even they will be able to do battle with the best of the year.

Stalwart, with Ort Wells and Delhi, with Balm and Broomstick in the great future handicaps. The best testimony to the belief in the memory of Beldame is that he was not beaten by any of his contemporaries. He was the best of his time, and he was the best of his time. He was the best of his time, and he was the best of his time.

Our younger generation of horses unquestionably are growing higher in class, but we would like to see how they would measure against these champions of the past, and at weights that would be approximately equal. Many possibly the majority of racers—loyal though they be to the memory of Beldame, Irish Lad and Hermit, believe that with the maturity which comes of age, Beldame and Stalwart, if not one or two of the others, would be able to do battle with the best of the year.

The mishaps to neither of them were such as to absolutely preclude their training, but the exciting of the ends, the injury to the hindquarters of Beldame, and the injury to the hindquarters of Stalwart, have had all that expert trainers and men of care that science and man can give, but it is not likely that either of them will be able to do battle with the best of the year.

WANT CHANGES IN FOOTBALL.

Sentiment of Rooters of Popular Sport Favors Much More Open Play.

BEFORE the echo of the last cheer for the final variety game has died away there is a unanimous demand from every source for more open football in the future.

At no time, since the rules have been the subject of controversy, has the sentiment been so wholly one-sided for the game as it is now. The sentiment is for a change in the game, and it is for a change in the game, and it is for a change in the game.

More than a score of conservatives, who have out-Heroded Herod in their persistent favoring of the methods now in vogue, are out of the game. It is necessary if the game is to retain its hold upon the students as well as the public.

The two principal events of the year, the Yale-Harvard game and the Princeton-Yale game, have been a disappointment to the fans. The Yale-Harvard game was a disappointment to the fans. The Princeton-Yale game was a disappointment to the fans.

Advocates of college football stand amazed when they learn that the sport during the past season, which closed yesterday, was indirectly responsible for eleven deaths and 121 serious injuries, several of the latter resulting in permanent disability. Compared with boxing, the popular fall pastime is brutal and exceedingly dangerous, and although fewer athletes take part in the game of footballs the percentage of deaths and injuries is largely in favor of boxing.

WHERE OF ALL THE MONEY GO?

The Bookmakers Say They Were Hard Hit Last Season.

WHAT has become of all the money wagered at the race tracks under the control of the Jockey Club this year? The question has been repeatedly asked by turfmen in the past two months. Few have been able to give a satisfactory answer.

According to some of the best informed men, the bookmakers, especially the members of the Metropolitan Turf Association, have been hard hit, yet it is a common complaint that the public has been a loser. The talent has also suffered a series of unusual reverses. If both the bookmakers and the regular players have lost, it is not natural to ask who has the money?

POTTER PALMER TO HAVE A MAUSOLEUM.

(Chicago Telegram to the New York Herald.)

One of the most imposing mausoleums in the world, to be built entirely of granite in Greco-Roman style, is to be erected to the memory of Potter Palmer, who died in Chicago two years ago last May. Ground for the foundation is to be broken in Greco-Roman cemetery to-morrow.

The mausoleum will cost $50,000. It will be a sarcophagus with a pediment and a colonnade. It will be a sarcophagus with a pediment and a colonnade.

TOMMY RYAN IS VERY LUCKY

Fortunate For Him That Jim Jeffries Is Two Thousand Miles Away.

TOMMY RYAN, middle-weight champion, has made a public statement that "he intends to whip Jeffries and take away his title." The announcement was made while Ryan was still excited over the beating he gave Jack Graham, a local fighter of Kansas City. Probably by this time Tommy has cooled down, and has started back to the farm, says Robert Egan, the best of fighting condition, and frequently gives several pounds below that figure. Jeffries touches the beam with 200 pounds or more in the hands of Tommy Ryan.

"Tommy taught Jeff some of the rudiments of the boxing game. That was when Jeffries was a good fighter, and in a ponderous sort of way, but he needed a little coaching for the fight with Fitzsimmons, in which he won the championship of the world. DICK WELLES IS TO RACE NO MORE

Son of King Eric and Tea's Over Is Retired
To the Stud.

RESPRESS TO BREED MARES.

Jockey Patsy Freeman Says French
Equines Are Better Than American Horses.

S. S. BROWN SHIPS YEARLINGS.

L EXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Dick Welles, holder of the world's mile record—1:37.4—on a circular track, has in all probability made his last appearance on the turf as a performer. This much leaked out during the recent visit of his owner, J. B. Respress, in this city.

While here the Cincinnati turfman made it known that the flying three-year-old of 1903 would be in the stud the coming season. He stated that he would breed ten of his own mares to him next spring, and permit the same number of outside mares to be booked to him. Respress admitted that he would endeavor after the stud season is over next year to again train the mighty son of King Eric, but he confessed that he had grave doubts of his wonderful colt ever again being able to stand severe training.

Dick Welles has not faced the starter since the fall meeting at Latonia in 1903. That season he was the acknowledged champion three-year-old of the West, and during the summer he had won the Drake offered $50,000 for him. Respress was also offered by five other turfmen that summer amounts ranging from $25,000 to $50,000 for him. Already James Huble, manager of J. E. Clay's Marchmont Stud, has booked a mare to him, and once the fact is known that his services are at the disposal of the public, his book will likely be filled within a week.

Respress is fast making his Ohio stud farm a most pretentious breeding plant. With Dick Welles he has now three stallions in reserve, Misco and Belle's Commander also being at his place. He has a select band of upwards of thirty stud mares, many famous turf performers being in the collection. Respress hopes to be able after two or three years to have a stable of horses all of his own breeding.

He has a desire to prove that he can raise performers of as high class as can be raised in Kentucky, and points to the black whirling imp as a sample of Ohio's contributions to the turf. He says public opinion is against him in his efforts to establish a successful thoroughbred breeding farm in the Buckeye State, but he is going to test the experiment and in two or three years if he finds he has no good reason he will transplant his establishment to the Bluegrass State and begin his career as a breeder anew. Among the mares he will breed to Dick Welles is the three-year-old filly, Woodrow Belle, the last daughter of the wonderful Thor to win honors on the turf.

Mal. T. J. Carson, Indiana farm, has lost by death the two-year-old bay filly, Pickens, by Exordium, dam of Brock in Vows, by Imp. Masque. The filly had been reserved for the stud by Maj. Carson and would have been used in the spring to Imp. Griffon.

Patsy Freeman, the American jockey, who has been riding at the country track, will not return to that country until next spring. He is now residing in this city and will go from here to Hot Springs, where he will ride during the coming winter months. Freeman said he got down to average American weights, and will be a valuable addition to the ranks of jockeys at the Vapor (C.) meet. He is much in love with racing as it is conducted in France and considers the French horse the greatest racing machine among equine breeds. He says they possess swiftness and remarkable weight-carrying ability and wonderful staying powers, and he believes the highest grade in France is above that of any other country. He attributes the wonderful popularity of racing there to the fact that the sport is allowed on Sunday, as baseball and theater are permitted in many of the principal cities of this country.

The attorneys of W. S. Barnes, of the Melbourne stud, are now pressing his $50,000 damage suit against the Long Island Railroad and Express Company, which was instituted in 1902, and are amassing facts and figures in the case which they are confident will come to trial at the December term of court in New York. The suit grew out of two carloads of yearlings being wrecked near the Sheepshead Bay race track in the spring of 1902, the youngsters being one of the most valuable consignments ever shipped from this city. None of the youngsters were killed, but every one of the lot were more or less injured. The attorneys firmly believe they will be awarded judgment for the full amount of the claim if they ever get the case to trial.

The yearlings of Capt. S. S. Brown, which "Pumper" Tucker shipped by ship from the Kentucky Association track to Memphis consists of seventeen head, nine colts and eight fillies, all but six of which were bred at Senoria stud. Those not selected by Tucker for Eastern racing will be fitted at Memphis and sent down to New Orleans to race in the early two-year-old events. Charles Deane, Brown's Kentucky trainer, considers the filly by Imp. Woodhorse, out of the famous Senoria, as the pick of this valuable collection of yearlings of either sex.

AMERICAN IS AGAINST RULE

Magnates To Make Changes
At Their Annual Meeting.

TO INCREASE THE BATTING.

Idea Seems To Be To Not Weaken
the Pitching Departments of Clubs.

WHAT THEY WILL TRY TO DO.

WITH the general demand by the American League patrons for increase in batting, several propositions are likely to be introduced at the annual baseball meeting in Chicago next month which will bring the desired result.

The club owners of the organization, headed by Ban H. Johnson, are a unit in declining against the foul strike rule. With the club owners determined that this rule shall be eliminated, and backed by the demands of thousands of the enthusiasts, this league can ill afford to let the matter go unnoticed, even though a majority of the managers wish to retain the regulation. It is the general public that keeps the game going and places the money in the coffers of the club owners so that salaries can be paid, and the general public has something to say at times.

For two years the American League has given the foul strike rule a thorough trial, and it has been found wanting. This was proved especially last season by the large number of 1 to 0 or 3 to 2 scores. Still, before the American League takes radical steps, it must be remembered that the rule has its advantages. Before its enactment a clever batter could knock out fouls until he got a ball that exactly suited him. During the last two years a pitcher bent all his energies toward throwing an unhit ball strike ball, after two strikes, including fouls, had been registered. The frequent successes that attended this effort are responsible for the few base hits totaled in comparison with the number in evidence before the foul strike rule came into existence.

In some quarters the proposition has been made to handicap pitchers by increasing the pitching distance. Any mention of such an innovation has always met with a better opposition by the writers, who are a unit in believing that they can labor under all the handicaps they can and still advance the argument that all the present day writers have been drilled in the art of pitching the regulation distance of sixty feet, and that an increase in the distance would mean the ruin of a majority of them. It would take years, they say, to train a new crop of twirlers who could gauge a new distance and develop their muscles so that they could stand the increased strain. It is stated, furthermore, that an increase in the pitching distance would increase the number of pitchers to be carried by each club.

The greatest weakness in the national game at present is in the pitching department, and any legislation compelling the use of more pitchers would only tend to weaken the game in its entirety. Place a pitcher further back in the diamond, that at present would also change the method of covering various plays, probably for the worse. It would require the third and first basemen to handle nearly all bunts to the left or right field, and the pitcher would encroach on the territory of the shortstop, who would therefore, have to play further outfield and toward third base.

A suggestion has been made to eliminate bunt hits or to penalize the failure to bunt successfully. This may be all right for the National League, but the American League patrons have been educated to seeing some clever bunting, as well as other kinds of hitting. What the American League people wish is to see more batting. At the present time the pitchers have a distinct advantage over the batter, and it is becoming three-to-two to watch two and three-run games. What remedies the American League will support is hard to say, but this is quite possible, the agreement with the National League to observe the foul-strike rule is likely to be abandoned. A further handicapping of the pitcher may also result, especially by giving the batter his base on three balls instead of four. Some of the leading American League pitchers offer as a compromise that the first foul be called a strike unless a further handicapping of the pitcher has been gained on the batter before, and this will give the batter two chances at the ball instead of one, as according to the new rule. This suggestion is said to meet the favor of several of the magnates. This much is certain, something must be done to increase the batting in the national game, and the patrons have the best of the past season, but this was due to the coarseness of the race. Not only the Cleveland club, but other teams in the American League, will be benefited by the elimination of the foul-strike rule. It is now "up to the magnates."

REVIEW OF THE FOOTBALL YEAR

No Champion Is Made In Either the East or the West.

SCORES ARE UNSATISFACTORY

Michigan, Minnesota, Yale and Pennsylvania Seem To Be the Leaders.

CONFUSION IN THE EAST.

ANOTHER football season closed yesterday with the game between West Point and Annapolis without producing that which is most dear to the layman—an undisputed champion—in either section of the country. Because of the impossibility of bringing together all the strong teams, and the fact that when schedules are made up the leading teams cannot be foretold, the final result is a disputed supremacy.

Michigan and Minnesota in the West and Pennsylvania and Dartmouth in the East finished their seasons without being defeated, all the other teams of prominence meeting defeat at least once. Michigan and Minnesota played only one "big" game on which a comparison could be based. That was with Wisconsin, and each of them liked the Badgers by a score of 23 to 0. On the strength of this the supporters of the maroon and gold claim equal honors with Michigan in the matter of the Western "championship." Michigan enthusiasts, on the other hand, point to Chicago's defeat of Northwestern by a score of 32 to 0, Michigan's victory over the maroons by 22 points to 12, and Minnesota's count of 17 to 0 against Northwestern as establishing a clear title to first rank for the Wolverines.

Unsatisfactory Comparisons.

Comparisons by scores are fruitless, however. The only way to determine a "championship" is by playing for it. But there is good reason for the opinion that Remarkable Shooting With a Revolver.

Louisville Man Kills Six
Turkeys With a Ham-merless Gun At From 125 To 165 Yards.

B. PERROW, Louisville's champion shot with a revolver, completed on Thanksgiving day a wonderful score, killing six turkeys out of as many shots with a hammerless revolver, which make, as is well known, is not used at target practice.

The turkey shooting was held on Thanksgiving day at Snyder's place, several miles out on the New Cut road. The turkeys were placed at a distance of 125 yards, but after Mr. Perrow had killed the first two which were put up, the distance was increased to 165 yards. Mr. Perrow then killed three more turkeys at this distance, and the next fowl was placed at 165 yards. Mr. Perrow killed the turkey at the first shot.

After this performance the game keeper placed the next turkey twenty-five yards further away and over a hill, where he could not be seen except by those standing on the mark, and then only a part of his body was visible. This was too great a handicap for even the champion, and he decided that six turkeys were sufficient, so he refused to shoot, and returned to the city, giving a turkey each to Messrs. J. W. Price, William Heyburn, Col. Morris Belknap, H. S. Perkins, T. B. Bell and kept one for himself.

Mr. Perrow returned recently from a bear and deer hunt down in Mississippi and experienced great luck, bringing home a large quantity of game. He is the star marksman of the Louisville Revolver Club, several of his remarkable scores having been printed in the Courier-Journal some time ago. He uses a hammerless pistol, which is much harder to shoot accurately than one of the usual target guns with hammers.

Michigan would win from Minnesota if the two teams had met during the final weeks of the season. Minnesota's team has a sterling defense, but a slow, lumbering offense. Against a team as evenly matched in its weight as Michigan's the Gophers would find it difficult to gain any long distance at a time with the offense shown.

Michigan's offense would prove stronger than anything Minnesota has tackled this season, and Dr. Williams' stone wall defense would be tested harder than it yet has been.

Yale and Pennsylvania.

The season in the West apparently was more successful from a playing standpoint than in the East. The comparatively poor showing of three of the hitherto leaders—Yale, Princeton and Harvard—was the occasion of much dissatisfaction in their respective camps. The prominence which some of the smaller Eastern teams took in the season's campaign was decidedly refreshing also. Although beaten by West Point, Yale vanquished all other rivals and brought its team to a level where it can argue with Pennsylvania for first honors, although the Quakers were unbeaten. Yale's defeat of Harvard by a score of 12 to 0, matches up well with Pennsylvania's victory over the crimson by 11 to 0. The fact that Harvard was supposedly in much better form when it played Yale than against Pennsylvania is to be considered. But the other fact remains that Yale did not meet Pennsylvania and no valid claims can be made.

Harvard and Princeton had decidedly second-class teams, the crimson barely escaping defeat at the hands of Dartmouth, which never was rated as even second class until within a couple of years.

Wrightington's Mistake.

Pennsylvania has recovered well from the slump which afflicted its football forces three years ago and has established its right to be counted in the "big four" for awhile yet. Harvard was a prominent member of all kinds of charges have been made during and since the season. On Wrightington's shoulders falls most of the blame, and the man who was a prominent member of the traditional "favoritism" charges of the traditional "favoritism" have been revived at Cambridge, and it is claimed Wrightington repeatedly sacrificed the good of the team to the interests of his own pecuniary gain, and that while the newspapers of Boston and other cities, through their correspondents, refused to pay him to him he established a censorship and otherwise unwelcome to himself men who were well disposed toward him in the hour of need.

No Advance In Style of Play.

The season in the West has produced little that is new in the way of actual play. The change of the rules so as to permit quarterback runs anywhere on the gridiron did not affect the game perceptibly. In general the standard of play has remained at a standstill. Chicago and Illinois showing a distinct gain in strength over last year.

The unimportant features of the year in the West include the failure of the graduate coaching system in Wisconsin, where it is planned to return to professional coaching next year; the exposure of a clear case of ineptitude on Minnesota's eleven; and the recurrence of the sickness of Coach Stagg, of the maroons, due to the excessive cares he shoulders. Although a failure at Wisconsin, the graduate coaching system has worked an improvement at Illinois, and the trouble at the Badger camp seems to have been personal rather than the fault of the system in general. Strathern's case, while not excused by the athletic committee of Minnesota, reflects on the good name of that institution, and it is a pity that the matter of governing athletes when it is possible for a man to play five successive years for one team without the fact being known until pointed out by outsiders.

Billy Buch was the biggest money-winner of 1904, and Sweet Marie, this year's leader, takes $10,000 short of the winnings of Billy Buch last year, his $23,800 being the largest amount ever captured by a class trotter in the history of the American trotting turf.

THE MOST SENSATIONAL FOOT- BALL PLAYER OF THE YEAR

WALKER ECKERSALL.

THIS little quarterback of the Chicago team made the most sensational run of the Chicago-Wisconsin game Thanksgiving day when he carried the ball 108 yards for a touchdown, which is perhaps the nearest performance that has been seen on a football field in several years. Long runs have been made by him and others against inferior teams, but that he could perform such a feat against the badger team was not even suspected by the spectators when the game started. The run was made practically through the whole Wisconsin team and gave Chicago a lead that made it almost certain of victory.

The Great Basement Toy Department Opens On Monday

SOMETHING very wonderful has occurred—down in the basement, where pots and pans and all kinds of kitchen utensils used to hold sway, now is a magic toy land. Mr. Toyman began erecting great stands and tables and spread his dominion until it now takes in nearly all the basement.

I REALLY don't need Santa this year, said Mr. Toyman, because I have so many toys of my own. He heard a chuckle and bless your life there was Old Santa himself adding Toy Locomotives, Automobiles and Steamboats to the collection. After all it takes Old Santa to put in the finishing touches.

Quaint School In Belgium. Where Boys Are Taught To Fish.

School Which is Now Subsidized by the Belgian Government Has Over a Hundred Pupils—Tuition There is Free, But When a Boy Graduates He Knows All There is to Know About the Business of Deep-Sea Fishing.

[Correspondence of the Courier-Journal.]
RUSSELS, Nov. 17.—What must be one of the oddest schools in the world exists in Belgium for the purpose of teaching everything connected with the business of fishing. Fishing—the deep-sea kind—is one of the most important industries of this country, and at the Fishery School, which is located at Ostend, and which, oddly enough, is conducted by a Catholic priest, boys are trained to be expert fishermen, just as they might be trained to be experts in any other profession.

This little country—so wide-awake that she surely might adopt the weasel as her emblematic animal in the menagerie of European national lions, bears and eagles—came to the conclusion some time ago that her fishing industry was on the wane. Her forty miles of coast with its sandy bottom that contains so many excellent shrimps, that shelters so many flat fish, and which, moreover, is so good for trawling, was once the starting place for much larger and more successful fishing fleets than those which put out to-day. These had diminished gradually, and it was discovered that Belgium was actually importing fish from neighboring countries to satisfy the needs of her Roman Catholic inhabitants, and that because the home catch was unequal to the demand. It began to be fancied that the Belgian fishers were not as expert as their rivals, and it was proved also that unable to make a good living in the old way by "going down" to the sea in ships, the young men of the coast were deserting the calling of their fathers and being drawn away to the factories which are springing up like mushrooms all over this busy little country.

A Long-headed Abbe.

This state of things was especially noticed and mourned over in Ostend, and one day the Abbe Pype—who has lived long in the seaport, and been going to sea with the fishing fleets for fifteen years or more—noticing the increasing misery of his poor fisher-folk, was struck with the idea that perhaps a better knowledge of their business might help the Belgian fishers to hold their own against their rivals. With this end in view he started in 1889 a small school for the express purpose of teaching "the gentle art of fishing." Little by little his untiring efforts were crowned with success, and now, in 1904, he has his regularly established School of Fishery, recognized and encouraged by the Government, which grants it a small subsidy, and whose good work is so widely recognized that other countries are starting similar institutions. Nieupoort and Blankerbergh, the two Dutch ports near Ostend, are imitating Ostend's example with equally good effect, while France and Germany are seriously inquiring into the matter. The improvement in the fishing industry, as the result of better education, has thus been officially recognized, while the change in the men themselves is most marked. Many of those who had given up the sea as their calling are coming back to it now that comparative prosperity smiles, for it is a good proverb that says, "the hook of the true fisherman is firmest in his own heart," and since King Leopold and his Government hold it as one of their chief ambitions to create a seafaring folk for the marine, which it is hoped will some day sail under the black, yellow and red flag of Belgium, the experiment is fostered and watched with much interest.

To begin with, before any small boy can attend the Abbe's classes—his school, in fact, being the fishers' finishing school—he must have gone to the common schools and have mastered the three R's or their equivalent in Flemish, besides knowing a little of mathematics. The pupils' ages average from thirteen to nineteen, but there is nothing to prevent any fisherman with a thirst for knowledge from attending the school as long as he likes, the course of study being absolutely free, the Abbe generously devoting all his means to it, besides devoting himself entirely to the service of the fisherfolk. There is an average of about one hundred pupils, with about forty in the first class, and lessons are given two days a week (to allow for the going out and return of the fishing boats) the hours being from 8.30 to 11.30, and from 1.30 to 4.30. The elder students take much of their instructions in the long winter evenings, but the youngsters who are aspiring only for that doubtfully happy position of "boy" (so well described by Rudyard Kipling in "Captains Courageous") and who either have not started on their career or whose sea trips are shorter are able to attend the classes during the day and more frequently.

Teaching Seamanship On Land.

The Abbe believes greatly in practical instruction, and with this idea has had built in his garden the model, actual size of a real fishing boat. True, everything that is below deck seems to have sunk in the garden, but the upper part is all that is necessary for his purpose, and it is here that the boys learn to mount the rigging without fear, so that when they do go to sea, they shall not have that sickening terror which has been so often described in sea stories.

Here, too, they learn signaling, to use their sextants, and, in fact, all those things which will surely be done on the deck of a boat. It is not difficult to realize that the youngsters who have not yet been to sea, thoroughly enjoy this "make believe."

Asked if this second and equally successful venture should not properly be called a "Professional School for Fishermen's Wives" the good Abbe only laughed, but there was a knowing twinkle in his eye as he acknowledged that his boys decidedly approved of his girls, who are, he said, much in demand in the matrimonial market of Ostend seafaring society.

HEBREW ARTIST'S MASTERLY PAINTING, "CHRIST AT PRAYER"

ALREADY covered with honor and fortune, the world-famous Hebrew artist, Max Rosenthal, of Philadelphia, who for a half century and more has finished hundreds of works of art, now in his declining years, being seventy-one years of age, has possibly attained higher and more lasting fame than ever by painting, according to his conception, a life-size picture of "Christ at Prayer" on a canvas forty by fifty inches.

Thus far art critics, ministers of every denomination by the hundreds and laymen have viewed the now famous painting, and have openly expressed their admiration and approval of the great work by the Hebrew artist. No less a dignitary than Cardinal Gibbons, head of the Roman Catholic Church in America, has seen the painting, by special invitation of the artist. His eminence gazed intently for a considerable time on the painting, and then turning around facing the assembled spectators, quietly inquired: "Where's the artist? Where's the artist?"

The artist being presented to the Cardinal, the latter clasped the hand of the Hebrew and exclaimed in a most dramatic manner: "It is great! It is great! It is great!" For many centuries since the renaissance of art began in Europe, painters and sculptors of almost every civilized nationality have striven to make an ideal representation of Jesus of Nazareth. Among them all, until the present day, it would be difficult to find one Jew who had conscientiously set forth in pigment or marble his own conception of the great founder of the Christian faith. The pictures of the Master that are found in hundreds of collections of famous works of art reflect in nearly every instance the nationality of the painter, not that of the Nazarene Himself. The conventional Jesus in art is a Latin-Caucasian, not a Semite.

Artist Rosenthal has an exalted idea of the character and personality of Jesus. He is proud, therefore, to represent him as what he was—a Jew.

In speaking of his work Mr. Rosenthal, after commenting upon the previous conception of Jesus as a weak man, said:

"My studies of the New Testament have convinced me that the character of Jesus as therein reported was, on the contrary, full of force, dignity and decision. A man who is not afraid to express his convictions, who has the moral courage to drive the money-changers from the temple, who challenges opposition and is ready to yield up his life for his principles, is not a weak character."

"According to the record (Matthew v. 17-20), Jesus strongly avowed his devotion to the Law. From this point of view have I constructed my picture."

I have aimed to paint Him a Jew, of the nationality to which He belonged, living his life and conforming to its laws and customs. It was, and still is, customary for the devout Jew, in offering his early morning prayers, to bind the phylacteries on his arm and hands and place them fleetly about his brow. Thus adorned Jesus must have prayed, robed also in the praying shawl, hemmed with the exquisite fringes. The attitude of prayer among the Jews is, and always was, not kneeling, but erect, with the single exception of one prayer, the "Adoration" on the great "Atonement Day." It is not with folded hands in supplication, nor with closed eyes, that the Jews pray (although such is the common attitude of the pictures of Jesus), but in the open and frank communion of the son who speaks to his father.

These references will, I hope, explain my picture. It has been a dream of my life to create this historical figure. For more than thirty years have I cherished the plan. I have made many, many preliminary sketches. This, the final outcome, I offer, not as a religious, but distinctively as a historical picture, aiming at conscientious accuracy."

This Kentuckian Conquered Outlaws of Three States Without the Use of a Gun.

LAWRENCEBURG, Ind., Nov. 26. (Special.)—In the person of Lawrenceburg, Ind., Marshal Nick Oberling, a native of Boone county, Ky., a unique character in the Ohio valley.

His life, although passed within the ascription of civilization, has been an unusually strenuous one, fraught with thrilling adventures, hair-breadth escapes, and valorous deeds that outlive the most sensational melodrama.

In the course of an eventful career, covering more than thirty years of active service as a member of the police force of Lawrenceburg, Marshal of this municipality and a special officer in the employ of railways and other corporations, he has saved seven human lives, made nearly four hundred arrests, most of which were of desperadoes of formidable type, and broken up the only organized band of lawbreakers that ever infested Dearborn county.

But never, even when engaged in the most hazardous undertaking, has he taken recourse to weapons other than those with which nature has so adequately supplied him, laughing at the only organized band of lawbreakers that ever infested Dearborn county.

Native of Boone County.

This doughty champion of law and order is a native of Kentucky, his birthplace being a log cabin near Idlewild, Boone county. He is of Franco-German descent. His father, John Oberling, who was one of the redoubtable Old Guard of Napoleon, immigrated to America in 1824, settling in Dearborn county, where, in common with several other immigrants he founded the picturesque little hamlet of New Alsace, nine miles northwest of Lawrenceburg. In 1854, six months before Nick came into the world, he removed to Boone county, Ky., renting a small farm and devoting himself to agricultural pursuits.

At the age of fifteen Nick wearied of farm life, and, coming to Lawrenceburg, engaged in various kinds of manual labor, until his eighteenth year, when, without solicitation on his part, he was appointed to the police force of this city.

In early youth Oberling established a reputation for unflinching courage and reckless daring, no danger being too great for him to face and no feat too hazardous for him to attempt. Endowed with almost superhuman strength and ability, he speedily won the distinction of being the fleetest sprinter, expert boxer and most skillful swimmer along the Ohio river, excelling in aquatic sports and contests of strength and endurance. He has never suffered defeat in a wrestling match or a bout at fistfights.

The Tale of the Bull.

Col. Thomas Willis, a prominent Boone county farmer, relates a thrilling yet humorous incident of Oberling's youth, illustrative at once of his aquatic skill, ready wit and utter disregard of danger.

Col. Willis was taking a drove of fine cattle across the Ohio river from this city on an old-fashioned horse-power ferryboat, similar to many still in use on the Ohio, when a young bull, which had been hobbled as a precaution against accident, partially loosened its fastenings, broke through the insecure railing of the boat and sprang into the water, immediately sinking from view.

The animal being very valuable, Col. Willis offered a liberal reward to the man who would save it from drowning.

Oberling, who was a passenger on the boat, volunteered to make the attempt, and at once dived to the bottom of the river, where, he speedily located the bull and freed it with a few strokes of a keen-bladed knife.

The struggling bovine arose at once, but the boy was not so fortunate. His efforts to liberate the bull had caused him to sink almost to his knees in a treacherous quagmire at the bottom of the river, and it was almost through mere presence of mind and most heroic exertion that he finally extricated himself.

When he reached the surface his strength was almost spent.

Espeying the bull a short distance away swimming lustily for the shore, he, with a last desperate effort, reached out and grasped it by the tail, where he clung utterly exhausted while the animal towed him ashore amid the plaudits of a crowd of wildly enthusiastic spectators, attracted to the waterside by rumors of his daring exploit.

Col. Willis tendered him $50, which he refused to accept.

"How is that?" inquired the Kentuckian in surprise. "You rescued the bull!"

"Yes," admitted Oberling, adding naively, "but the bull reciprocated!"

Nor could he be induced to accept any remuneration for his valiant service, but the exploit won for him the appointment to the police force of Lawrenceburg.

The Fairwell Gang.

Oberling attained his chief official distinction in the capture of the Fairwell gang, a notorious band of thieves and highwaymen, who terrorized Dearborn county.

Having secured sufficient evidence to convict every member of the gang, Oberling returned to Lawrenceburg, organized a posse of brave and reliable men, at the head of which he marched upon the road straightaway after nightfall, hoping thereby to take the law into his own hands and capture them without bloodshed.

In this, however, he was doomed to disappointment. Fairwell was warned of his peril, and the rendezvous was found deserted.

Undiscouraged by the miscarriage of his carefully laid plans, the Marshal pushed resolutely forward in the way of the fugitives, overtaking them near the mouth of the Great Miami river, where a furious struggle took place, resulting in the utter rout of the Fairwell contingent, which fled precipitately before the onslaught of the officers.

Bob Fairwell, heavily punished, fled, dashed for the river, and, taking to the water, started to swim across into Ohio, where he could safely capture by the Indiana officers.

Without a moment's hesitation the intrepid Marshal followed, overtaking him in mid-stream, and, after a brief struggle, the outlaw was put up a terrific resistance.

The officer's peril was intensified at this time by the fact that several of the ruffian's friends had congregated upon the shore, and were hurling stones and cutgills at his head in reckless disregard for the safety of the Marshal.

Several of the missiles struck Oberling about the head, and he undoubtedly would have fallen had he not been so firmly fixed to the riverbank.

Company, on Mr. Pullman's death he was made president of the corporation, and now at sixty-one is a great captain of industry.

born and adjacent counties a quarter of a century ago.

This lawless band, of which Bob Fairwell was a notorious leader, caused the acknowledged leader, held untrapped away in Dearborn county for more than a decade. They would rob and travel in broad daylight, boldly drove to market and sold as their own cattle and other live stock belonging to farmers throughout the county; looted country stores under the very eyes of the proprietors and committed various other outrages unimpeded, so thoroughly had they established their reign of terror.

The county authorities were powerless to suppress the lawless band, and when, shortly after assuming his official duties, Marshal Oberling announced his intention of breaking up the gang, he was regarded as being foolhardy in the extreme. Unaided, however, by the ill-prospects of his fellow officers, he went on with his self-imposed task intelligently and systematically.

His first move was to establish a line in the field of the gang's operations, to get upon friendly footing with the leader, and so thoroughly did he ingratiate himself, that he was favored that before he had been in the vicinity a week he had been treated with the unsuspicious respect of a local official.

Fairwell's cabin, Oberling speedily learned, was the headquarters of the gang, and, consequently, he made it his headquarters for the purpose of gathering up the gang, and so thoroughly did he ingratiate himself, that he was favored that before he had been in the vicinity a week he had been treated with the unsuspicious respect of a local official.

opportune arrival of a detachment of his posse, who took the cowardly rascals into custody.

Oberling drew the outlaw leader ashore, more dead than alive from the combined effects of injuries received through the recklessness of his confederates and the sound drubbing administered by the officer. He, as well as the members of his band, ultimately held the full penalty for their transgressions.

The Highwaymen of "Lost Bridge."

Oberling once effected the capture of three desperate highwaymen in his "Lost Bridge," which until last summer, when it was destroyed by fire, spanned the Great Miami river near Elizabethtown, O., and which was made famous by the fact that Gen. John Morgan crossed it with his forces during his memorable raid through this section.

The Marshal and his son, John, had been to Cincinnati in a spring wagon, were returning brought by nightfall through the bridge, which was the scene of more hold-ups than any other locality in Southeastern Indiana, when a burly ruffian sprang out and stopped the team. Simultaneously two others attempted to climb in the wagon over either side.

Aroused by the abrupt stopping of the vehicle, Oberling, who had been in the driver's seat, sprang to the front of the wagon bed, sprang to a sitting posture just in season to foil the purpose of the highwaymen.

Crying out to his son to whip up the horses, he seized the twin by the necks, and, with a marvelous exhibition of strength and agility, he flung them, heads together with such fearful impact that they were rendered unconscious.

Knowing that the highwaymen were in the wagon, he sprang forward, and, grasping the reins of the horse, he was picked up unconscious.

The highwaymen were returned to Cincinnati, where they were convicted upon evidence furnished by Oberling and his son.

While Marshal of Lawrenceburg, Oberling became a veritable terror to the lawless element of the county. Some subscribed $25, others $500. They sent a farmer to a farm to buy a horse, and another to St. Paul to buy old rails. A land promoter was building a small branch line out of Devil's Lake to the South, and was getting him to survey the line. Three section hands to lay the track. But they needed more money. They bought land along the line and laid out three towns, sold the lots, and used the money to buy an old engine, a day-coach, and four box cars from the Great Northern railway.

Then the road was started. It will stop for any farmer at any place. Last year the road made his expenses. Last year the road made his expenses. Last year the road made his expenses.

FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER

Exquisite Ideas In Needlework Applied to Dress.

FASHION has demanded that fuller lines be achieved, and in seeming contradiction, declares for tight-fitting bodices; then, as suddenly, veers around and permits lingerie blouses! Yet, under it all, she has laid down certain rules for this winter's styles that all these contradictions are in perfect accord with, and that brings them into harmony with each other.

Skirts flow out on fuller lines, and marvelous, indeed, are the ways in which these fuller lines are contrived! A tight-fitting bodice is seen, but draped with a shawl-collar, and tricked out in ways that rob it of its over-severe lines. Or a lingerie blouse appears, but is caught in by a deep girdle that stimulates the tight bodice and yet leaves the blouse free to fall into the soft little folds that are so pretty.

Paris has gone in for handwork, and is lavishing a wealth of beautiful work on everything she turns out. And the new styles lend themselves with wonderful grace to this exquisite needlework, that not only Paris, but the world of women, is wild over. Smocking and shirring, puffs and tucks, fagoting (there's a new form), and French knots find their way on the prettiest of the new gowns.

Even the heavier materials are coaxed into new forms of beauty that give them a gracious, feminine touch. Shirring is the most popular of all the hand-touched, every known form of it, and a host of ingenious new ways invented for the occasion.

Skirts are shirred on to the belt, the rows of shirring serving as a pretext for the fullness that springs out and grows more and more until it flares out into voluminous folds at the feet. Ruffles are set on with it—sometimes whole skirts made up of three or four deep flounced shirring, with headings, and joined together. Yokes and the tops of sleeves show rows of it, sometimes done on cords, sometimes plain, sometimes shirred in tiny tucks.

Puffings—a form of shirring, after all—are everywhere, with every day an interesting new use for them. Narrow bands of it are fastened or set scalloped-fashion on the edges of sleeve-ruffles, around yokes, over bodices, on cuffs, everywhere that they can find a place, and then repeated in a little larger way on the skirt.

The main idea of one stunning bodice was widely set rows of shirring run straight across yoke and sleeves, with flat narrow bands set on over each row of shirring, and a chemise of soft batiste tucked across. The skirt was shirred to match around the yoke, and from the knees down was made up of three deep circular ruffles, each coming out from under the last, and each ending in a scalloped edge, bound with narrow flat bias bands of the cloth, with a large dot in the center of each scallop, made of a circular bit of the cloth, applied on.

Sleeves ending in a protrusion of little hand-made ruffles, and a cuff embroidered in silk to match the material, are new and attractive, and deep collars and cuffs are trimmed with the hand-embroidery, too.

Smocking is as old-fashioned as the hills, but is easy to do, and at the same time a mighty pretty way of making and trimming a gown of cashmere or any other soft stuff. Make the bodice with a deep pointed yoke and collar of smocking, running a narrow band of smocking down the center of the sleeves and a couple of bands around the skirts—just at the knees, the other half way between the first and the hem.

A pretty little adjunct to a soft white gown is a small white broadcloth affair, more like a "monkey jacket" than anything else, that serves as a light wrap. It is embroidered in white, and made to fasten on the shoulders and down the side, fastening with big buttons.

Some of the prettiest of the new dresses for "grown-ups." Mark dots at regular intervals with a pencil—for wee folk. But it is not, by any means, confined to children's clothes, but finds its way do-

Smocking and the Latest Form of Fagoting.

THOSE pretty little dresses for children, made with no trimming except smocking, are among the simplest and most attractive of fashions for wee folk. But it is not, by any means, confined to children's clothes, but finds its way do-take a stitch over two dots, holding them together. Then, push your needle diagonally through the cloth to a dot on the row below, and repeat the stitch. Then back to the first row and down again to the second, and so on, always working the two rows at once.

In children's dresses it is used for deep yokes—the little "laid tucks" giving plenty of fullness—and sometimes at the top of the sleeve, and on the cuff, sometimes even on the yoke of the skirt. And on girls' and women's dresses it is almost every way, from being the only trimming to just appearing, perhaps, on a bit of chiffon.

Fagoting has developed a new form. Instead of the sort of stitching that it really was—the thread carried from side to side—it is taken straight up and down, the needle, twisted two or three times around the thread on the return trip, the number of twists depending upon the distance apart of the bands to be joined by it. The further apart they are, the looser will be the effect, but the thread should be heavier than for close work.

But everything made of fagoting—collars, yokes, everything—should be made on a foundation cut out of paper.

The diagram shows an exceptionally good pattern for a yoke and collar, finished in a scallop.

Cut the foundations for collar and yoke, separately, out of paper, and baste the rows of bias folds at uniform distances on it, and fagot-stitch them together. The last row of scallops will make a pretty variation, as the stitch will lengthen and shorten to fit the curves. Or another stitch can be introduced there.

When both yoke and collar have been finished, join them by a row of fagoting before removing the paper; they are both basted to. The collar should stand up, the row of stitching supplying the necessary curve between collar and yoke.

Then, tear the paper carefully away, baste a bit of lace or ruching inside the top row, and you've a mighty attractive collar, which can be successfully laundered time and time again.

Evening hats are growing prettier, especially those with two-toned brims, trimmed with the duff of marabout feathers, or with pink roses and plumes.

Notes of the Newest Things.

CHAMELEON silks, in a shimmer of soft, pale shades, change with every light into new beauty. Each is a combination of several colors, yet each is dominated, though ever so slightly, by one of them.

New corsets carry out the two-tone idea, being made of flowered brocade and lined with pink or blue.

Handkerchief linen, embroidered by hand, makes the newest and best of the new blouses. Deeper cuffs are in evidence.

A new toy for babies is a "menagerie ring," a small hoop-wound with ribbon, with half a dozen rubber animals—the kind that whistle—hanging on.

China silk slips, sheer and cool, are made to wear under the lingerie blouses. White, or the palest shades of pink or blue, are the only colors worn for slips.

Silk hosiery comes in the loveliest shades, and is even more distinctive in its rough weave than pongee. But pongee is lovelier than ever, too, in new shades.

Brown lovers have brought not only rich bronzes to the front, but have brought in even coppery tones, and those exquisite red-bronzes in even coppery tones, and early fall. The soft, shimmering silks they are made up in add to this effect.

Cheap Vegetables in Toothsome Form.

UNHAPPY is the housekeeper who has fallen into a culinary rut. She does not always belong to that class who must count every penny spent upon her table. More often she is one of those women whose household allowance is neither very small nor very large. She is not forced to devise new dishes from economical materials, nor can she indulge in epicurean feasts. Therefore her task of planning meals is apt to lack zest for herself, whereas if she would occasionally embark upon a gastronomical voyage of adventure, the result would be stimulating to her own interest and eminently pleasing when the family circle gathers around the dinner table.

SWEET POTATOES.
For instance, many women who think that sweet potatoes boiled or baked are sufficient variant on the Irish or white potato, will find that they lend themselves to many other tasty dishes, notably the recipes used by Southern housekeepers.

For a breakfast dish or entree at dinner, the baked sweet potato is excellent. Take potatoes that have been boiled or steamed until tender, and when cold slice, moderately thin. Put a layer, about an inch thick in the bottom of a shallow pudding dish. Sprinkle with butter and white sugar, add another layer of potatoes, then butter and sugar again. Continue until the dish is filled. Scatter butter and sugar over the top and pour over the potatoes just enough boiling water to keep them from burning. Cook half an hour in a moderate oven, or until the potatoes look transparent and are delicately browned. The sugar may be omitted and a seasoning of salt and pepper used. Should the potatoes become dry, baste with melted butter. Those who do not like too much butter will prefer this dish if half a cupful of melted butter is mixed with boiling water, and used to baste the vegetable.

Another way of serving the tuber is suited to dinner, luncheon or supper. Cut the cold potatoes into slices a little more than an inch thick. For one quart melt half a cupful of butter and add to it a plentiful seasoning of salt and pepper and two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Dip the slices in this mixture, lay in a buttered pan and cook about ten minutes in a hot oven. When glossy and brown they are ready for the table.

GOOD LUNCHEON DISH.

A delicious hot dish for luncheon or supper is a sweet-potato pudding. Peel a large raw sweet potato, dry and grate it. Set a quart of milk over the fire. When hot put in the grated potato. Let it come to a boil, then add an ounce of butter. Take from the fire, stir in four eggs previously beaten to a froth. Season to taste with salt and pepper and bake twenty minutes in a buttered pudding dish. If the salt and pepper are left out and sugar to taste is added this pudding makes a good dessert.

Though the above is an excellent sweet dish there is an old-fashioned recipe for a potato pudding that far surpasses it. Take half a pint of the grated potato, add to it a pint of sugar, half a pint of molasses and an ounce of butter. When these ingredients are beaten light and smooth add enough sweet milk to make a thin batter. Season to taste with grated orange peel and ginger. Beat three eggs until light, add to the batter and bake in a hot oven. When a candy-like crust forms on top stir from the bottom and let a second crust form.

If a custard is desired for a sweet potato pie, try this: Parboil two medium-sized sweet potatoes, and when cold peel and grate fine. Beat the yolks of three eggs to a froth, add a cup of sugar and beat again. Add a piece of butter the size of a hickory nut. Stir the potatoes in gradually, add a cup of milk and season with two tablespoonfuls of cinnamon. Bake in a deep tin lined with good pastry. Spread with a meringue made from the whites of the eggs and powdered sugar. Set in the oven until a light brown.

CAULIFLOWER.
Cauliflower is also a vegetable with great possibilities for the housewife inclined to gastronomic adventure. Try some day cauliflower au Parmesan, or stuffed cauliflower, both beloved of the epicure.

For cauliflower au Parmesan, break the heads in large flowerets and boil in salted water until tender, or about thirty minutes. Arrange them in a baking dish so that they look like one head, and powder with grated Parmesan or other good cheese. Dust with fine bread crumbs and bits of butter. Make a sauce from a teaspoonful of butter, salt to taste, a teaspoonful of lemon juice, the yolks of two eggs beaten to a froth, and two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese. Pour around the cauliflower and set in the oven until a delicate brown.

STUFFED CAULIFLOWER.

To stuff a cauliflower, boil a whole head of good size until tender. Carefully cut out the heart, chop it fine and add to it four or five mushrooms and a dash of cayenne. When mixed fill the hollowed head with the force-meat. Heat it through in the oven and serve with white sauce.

A good white sauce, seasoned with a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, and a teaspoonful of lemon juice, may be used to dress cauliflower in any form. Sometimes melted butter, salt, pepper, lemon juice and a grating of nutmeg are used.

In selecting cauliflower, see that the head is white and tender. Before boiling, cut away the outer leaves and soak an hour at least in cold water with the head downward. If slugs or insects are inside, they will crawl out. Some cooks tie a piece of coarse muslin over the head while boiling to keep it in shape.

STUFFED CABBAGE.

Cleanse and boil a large, firm head of cabbage until tender, then scrape out the inside, leaving enough for a solid outer wall. With the scrapings mix a cupful of fine bread crumbs, a little salt, pepper and celery seed and a small onion (if liked) minced fine. Fill the cabbage with this stuffing, tie around it a strip of cloth and bake until brown.

Squash is one of the least expensive of winter vegetables, and yet the family ties of it quickly because baked or washed is the only form in which it appears on the average table. Here is a receipt for squash croquettes which can be evolved from left-overs of baked squash.

Press the meat through a vegetable press, and to each pint add half a cupful of fine bread crumbs, a level teaspoonful of salt and one of butter and a dash of pepper. Mix thoroughly over the fire so that the butter will melt. Take the warm mass from the fire and turn it out to cool. When thoroughly cooled, shape into croquettes, dip in beaten egg, roll in bread crumbs, and fry in hot lard.
